

Paul Holbrook

Writer / Director

Paul Holbrook is a multi-award-winning writer and director. A proud working-class Bristolian, he was born and bred in Hartcliffe - a council estate in the Southwest of England. Despite a lack of any higher education, Paul started his career as a screenwriter, writing feature-length scripts on spec. He made encouraging progress, advancing through various industry-backed screenwriting competitions including Page, Shore, Screencraft and in 2018 he made the final 1% of The Academy Nicholl Fellowship (The Oscars). In the UK, he has also been selected for industry-backed mentoring and career development through BBC, Creative England, Bafta, and the BFI.

As a self-taught Director, Paul's work looks to fuse the flair of genre cinema with grounded social realism, and his passion for intimate, character-driven stories is evident in all his produced work thus far. His films have screened and won numerous awards at Bafta, BIFA, and Oscar-qualifying festivals around the world including Palm Springs, BFI London, Encounters, and Aesthetica. His short film 'Hungry Joe' was nominated for a London Critics Circle Award and was described by Short of the Week as "One of the UK's great modern horror shorts". His highly anticipated follow-ups, 'Hollow' which was produced via The Pitch Film Fund, and 'Old Windows' starring Larry Lamb have both gone on to receive similar critical acclaim.

Paul is a Bafta Connect member, is listed on the Shore Director's roster, has been funded by BFI Network, and has recently been selected for both BBC Voices and Network@LFF. He is developing various TV and film projects with established production companies in the drive towards longer form work. He is also a proud ambassador for Youth Moves, a charity empowering young people from disadvantaged backgrounds to thrive and break away from the stigmas they face.
