UNICORN 2019 Harper Collins	The story of a god-fearing Muslim boy from the Middle East who, to both the surprise and outrage of their family, becomes one of the UK's leading drag performers. Along the way we see their parents attempt to disabuse Amrou of both their homosexual inclinations and an early penchant for being fabulous. We watch Amrou develop an obsession with marine biology, become an academic superstar, and get a scholarship to Eton. From there, it's off to Cambridge, where - on the face of it - Amrou is the happiest gay at the university, but inside they're cracking up. Amrou has a breakdown and attempts to put the pieces back together, helped to an extent by returning to Islam in unusual ways, and coming into their own as the leader of the critically acclaimed drag troupe, Denim. It is a strange, brilliant, and unique story about not fitting in, and how you deal with always feeling like you're standing on the outside of something. And who doesn't, to some extent, have experience of that?
