

All on the Board

Writer - non-fiction

All on the Board is the pseudonym for two writing partners, Jeremy Chopra and Ian Redpath, who found huge success on social media when in 2017 they began sharing poetry and other “ditties” focusing on mental health and inspiring positivity and hope. These were written on the customer information boards on display in London tube stations, which gained them a huge number of followers and celebrity endorsements since. Shared by the likes of Michelle Obama, Katy Perry and the BBC, they are recognised as an institution in their own right, especially amongst Londoners.
