

Sam Morris

Author, Content Creator, Writer

Sam Morris is an artist, writer & content creator from London.

Morris launched his eponymous erotic platform in 2016 in which his boudoir photography emerged as a beacon of queer romanticism, captivating audiences and earning him widespread acclaim, including capturing the attention of international publications and esteemed fashion houses.

In 2020, Morris published his debut book, "Don't Fall In Love, Sam." A compilation of essays and poetry inspired by his time dwelling in the hedonistic city of Berlin. Notably, Russell T Davies described the work as "like love letters from the edge".

In 2024 Morris published his memoir "Pieces Of A Boy", which explores pockets of his life from being a successful child actor, to sex work, and estrangement from family. Jake Shears described it as a 'brutal & beautiful read' citing that we 'need these stories'.

Morris has garnered a following of over 500k across his socials where he expresses himself through his creative work, as well as storytelling, comedy skits, and dancing.

Morris currently resides in Brighton, UK.
